Homesteading For Beginners, William Walsworth: How to Build a Profitable Homestead Backyard Farm & Make Money from Urban Farming The Easy Way: A Self-Sufficiency Survival ... Beginners, Sustainable Lifestyle Book 1) Review from Jeannie Zelos book reviews Genre: non fiction I was brought up in a home where most of our food was home grown; fruit and veg fresh in summer and preserved for winter, and winter veg dug out or picked as needed, the goats supplied milk (eurggh â “ you either love or hate goats milk, and I hate it), chickens supplied eggs and meat, rabbits also for meat and market, and all the manure from those plus all plant based waste made up compost. We had home made clothes too, sewn, knitted, crocheted, I so wanted a shop bought dress that wasnâ™t some bigger childâ™s cast off. Donâ™t you just feel for me ;-)Anyway, its left me with an appreciation for home grown produce and its taste and freshness, and over the last few years weâ™ve grown a lot for the family. Sadly now due to health issues its out mostly, except for the trees where now theyâ™re grown its mostly just picking and eating! I still love to read books about self sufficiency though. This one is a bit different from others Iâ™ve read, its not a âœhow to grow/rear âœ read where the practicalities are discussed, plans given for making sheds, instructions and timings for sowing seeds and planting out etc, but a how to manage growing the right things in the space you have, what to grow for best profit, how to find a market for produce. It deals very much with the business side of such an enterprise rather than the practical, hands-in-the-soil approach we usually get.
